Metro Joins The Coin Family

The day finally came when the Coin family got a call from the animal shelter that their new family member, Metro the dog, was ready to come home.

The Coins dog-proofed their home, bought dog food, toys and other supplies. The schedule of dog-related chores is on the refrigerator. They are ready for Metro.

Nick and Penny are so excited to meet their new pet. When they arrive at the shelter, they jump out of the car and run inside, squealing with anticipation. A staff member brings Metro out to meet them. Metro is hesitant at first, sniffing Nick and then Penny. They pet him gently, and suddenly Metro starts dancing around in circles and barking happily. He knows he is going home.

Q and Di are happy to see their kids bonding with their new dog. It's a moment they will always remember. They load the kids and Metro into the car and head home.

Helping Others

Local pet shelters are usually nonprofit organizations or charities, which means they rely on donations from generous people in the community to do their good work. Some charities help animals while others help children, homeless adults, people with disabilities or many other groups.
